Salt water crocodiles

Spencer U4A

A Saltwater crocodile is the largest reptile in the world. It is one of the 17 extant species of crocodile and has another name, the Crocodylus Porosus. It is the most aggressive crocodiles in the world.

Saltwater crocodiles are apex predators. They wait for fish or land animals to come close, then rush out to attack. Salt water crocodiles eat fish, amphibians, molluscs, birds, small mammals and other reptiles. Their diet changes as they get older. Babies eat insects and small fish while adults eat small mammals. Crocodiles can last 2-3 months without food in the wild.

Saltwater crocodiles live in southeast Asia and northern Australia. They live here because they are in warmer water and near the equator. You can find them in rivers and lakes but mostly in the ocean. They also like lazing around on the river banks. Salt water crocodiles can hold their breath for over an hour underwater.

There are three main stages of a crocodile's life. The mother crocodile lays a batch of eggs, these eggs hatch into juvenile crocodiles. They stay with their mother for 5 weeks before living alone as adult crocodiles. Crocodiles can live for up to 70 years. In this time, they could die from fights with other crocodiles, but because they are apex predators they are not in danger of being hunted by any other creature except for humans.
